(5) After cold forming, the passivation coating of stainless steel surface will be damaged, and be attached to stamping oil, debris of mold and other metal, which can easily cause corrosion. In order to make the finished workpiece with good stainlessness and smooth finish, it is necessary to clean oil stains and process passivation, and if possible, the surface of the workpiece can be protected by the plastic film.

thickness in cold rolling, a series of rolling mills may be used to share the total reduction. One important application of cold rolling is the removal of yield point from mild steel sheets using skin pass rolling [temper rolling]. In this the steel sheet is given a light reduction of 0.5 to 1.5% . Such a process eliminates yield point elongation.
